'Norman Foster - Architecture is About People'

October 25 to December 30, 2001

Museum of Applied Arts, Cologne

Following recent exhibitions of Foster and Partners' work at the British Museum in London and the Louisiana Museum of Modern Art in Copenhagen (until December 9), the Museum für Angewandte Kunst (Museum of Applied Arts) in Cologne presents a major retrospective survey entitled 'Norman Foster - Architecture is About People'. Beginning with early projects such as 'The Retreat' (1963) and the 'Waterfront Housing' in Cornwall (1964) the exhibition surveys Foster's entire body of work including current unbuilt projects. Rather than assessing the practice's work chronologically, the exhibition is arranged thematically, dealing with subjects such as mobility, communication, public space, ecology, technology and sociology. Norman's Foster's important friendship and professional relationship with Richard Buckminster Fuller is a special focus of the exhibition.

Social Ends - Technical Means

The social organisation of buildings - designed in response to a radical questioning of how people want to live and work - has led to the technological innovations of Foster's buildings.

Mobility and Communication

Norman Foster's fascination with flying is used as a metaphor to explore projects relating to travel, communications and infrastructure.

Connecting People - Public Spaces

The projects in this section illustrate themes of urban planning, high population density, mixed-use and the balance between public space and the private realm.

The Art of Making

This section is a combination of study room and workshop. Original early drawings are juxtaposed with five current projects, which illustrate the entire design and construction process. The recently opened
